() respects your privacy. This form explains why we collect and use your personal information, who it may be disclosed to, and obtains your consent to that collection, use and disclosure. It forms part of your Services Agreement.

Using and sharing your personal information

The personal information we process about you includes information about you and your disability, in many forms — written records by us and other health professionals, and photographs and videos of you and your condition. We use it to provide, manage and administer your care and for directly or indirectly related purposes.

We may also share your personal information with: our funding providers; your nominated GP and other NDIS providers; government and regulatory bodies (the NDIA, Services Australia, other disability agencies and the ATO); NDIS-approved auditors for audit and quality-assurance activities (you are automatically enrolled in NDIS audits and can opt out at any time); people acting on your behalf (nominated representatives, legal guardians, executors, trustees and legal representatives); the police, the NDIS Commission, or courts and tribunals under compulsory notice; financial institutions for payment processing; our contracted service providers; behaviour support practitioners and other providers in your team (to monitor the implementation of a behaviour support plan, and following any use of an unauthorised restrictive practice); anyone we are required by law to disclose to without your consent; and other persons specified in our Privacy and Dignity Policy.

1. Complaints, incidents, and access

Our Privacy and Dignity Policy explains how you can access the personal information we hold about you and how to make a complaint about a breach of your privacy — handled under our Feedback and Complaints Management Policy. Any breach or alleged breach is reported and managed under our Incident Management and Reporting Policy. You can ask us for a copy of any of these policies.

2. Withdrawing or amending consent

You may withdraw or amend your consent at any time by written notice to .
