With respect to each of the NDIS participants I work with on behalf of , I will follow the guidelines set out in the National Framework for Reducing and Eliminating the Use of Restrictive Practices in the Disability Service Sector. These guidelines include:

- respecting a participant's human rights;
- taking a person-centred approach when working with a participant or developing a positive behaviour support plan;
- adhering to the national approach and applying the principles regardless of where in Australia a person lives;
- focusing on delivering quality outcomes and safe workplaces;
- being accountable through documentation, and working towards transparent and consistent reporting;
- ensuring the participant's advocate or representative is involved in the planning, review, assessment and monitoring process;
- taking a collaborative approach by working with other service providers; and
- raising awareness, providing education and facilitating accessible information about restrictive practices.
